

Dr. Bruno Oliveira Martins

Senior Researcher

The Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO)

Mr. Martins is a Senior Researcher at The Peace Research Institute Oslo (PRIO), coordinator of the Security Research Group and a member of the Migration and Law & Ethics Research Groups.

His research interests lie on the intersection between technological developments, security practices, and societal change. He is currently contributing to and lead projects on states of emergency and on emerging security technologies. These include research funded by the European Commission on preparedness of metropolitan areas in front of drone threats, a network of academics studying drones and other security technologies, a project on exceptionalism during the COVID-19 pandemic, and a Horizon 2020 project on border technologies.

Mr. Martins is interested in several issues within the wider security studies agenda, and I've researched, taught and published on EU's security and defence policies, including counter-terrorism, EU-Israel-Palestine relations, and the politics of security and defence research and innovation.